Kinetic vs. Potential Energy Foldable

Instructions: The purpose of this assignment is to develop your understanding of potential (PE) and kinetic energy (KE). You will be making a foldable to compare and contrast Kinetic Energy and Potential Energy.

Procedure: (see notes)

1. Fold your paper, in half (along side), then fold your paper in half.
2. Cut the flaps for the 2 front sections. (1 cut)
 - Cut only on the line that says cut on line. This will create two flaps, which will allow you to compare and contrast potential and kinetic energy.
3. On the front of the flaps, creatively write each creatively word.
 - Kinetic energy
 - Potential energy
4. Inside potential energy flap, write the following information for each:
 - a. Definition
 - b. 3 types of Potential Energy
 - c. Formula for gravitational potential energy
 - d. 3 Original Examples
 - e. Unit for potential energy
 - f. Copy down the given word problem and then solve the potential energy problem.
 - A rock on the roof of a building is 45 meters high. The rock weighs 20 N. The rock has _____ energy. Calculate it.
5. Inside the kinetic energy flap, write the following information for each:
 - a. Definition
 - b. Formula
 - c. 3 Original Examples
 - d. Unit for kinetic energy
 - e. Copy down the given word problem and then solve the kinetic energy problem.
 - A Car travels with a velocity of 40 m/s and has a mass of 1220 kg. The car has _____ energy. Calculate

Sinusoidal Waves

When the wave function is sinusoidal then we have sinusoidal wave.

A one-dimensional sinusoidal wave traveling to the right with a speed V . The brown curve represents a snapshot of the wave at $t = 0$, and the blue curve represents a snapshot at some later time t .

Repeat the process for the other part. No-Heat Beach Wave Create a beach wave fast without a flat iron, clump or straightener. For the under layers, curl the hair towards the face. The open first string vibrates at a frequency of 329.63 hertz and produces a higher pitch. As we'll see in the next section, the Doppler effect is directly related to the frequency of a wave, whether it's made of water, light or sound. Then, flip the hair using your fingers to allow the under layers to dry evenly. Woman applying spray on curly brown hair close-up Beach waves make a great universal hairstyle for different hair types. When you blow into a clarinet, a thin reed begins to vibrate. Create a twisted cord on the right section and flat iron the two long twists from the top. The method is great if you're just in from a pool and need to make a fast touch up for dinner. This results in an area where all of the air molecules are pressed together and, right beside it, an area where air molecules are spread far apart. Take a woodwind instrument, such as a clarinet. Also, ensure that there are no tangles. Separate the hair into different sections and begin clumping each part from the roots curling, leaving an inch towards the end to create the perfect wave. Apply a heat protective spray on the hair and brush it to ensure the product is spread evenly. The beach wave is the only style that gives you the freedom to rock natural hair in the form of curls or waves and still look stylish. Take one part of the hair and wrap it around the barrel, away from the face. When most people think of waves, they think of water waves. Brush your hair and section it into four sections. You can also pin, twist and wait a few minutes before unravelling to the perfect beach wave style. Repeat the process on the left part and allow the hair to cool before unravelling. Lightly mist your hair with a sea salt spray and separate it into two sections on the right and left. Repeat the process for all the sections and apply hairspray. The vibrating reed first pushes against air molecules (the medium), then pulls away. For this look use a 32 mm barrel or within this range to ensure the curls are looser and bigger compared to sections of hair that are not yet curled. Apply a styling product to enhance the volume of the air-dried strands. A Simple Twist and Using a Flat Iron is the easiest way to create a beach wave especially if you're already a fan of using a flat iron. A straightening iron is ideal for this style as it makes the waves last long. For example, the open sixth string of a guitar vibrates at a frequency of 82.407 hertz (cycles per second) and produces a lower pitch. Do not touch the roots to preserve the natural beach volume. A light wave, like a water wave, is an example of a transverse wave, which causes a disturbance in a medium perpendicular to the direction of the advancing wave. But light and sound also travel as waves. And the best part is you can pull it off in the comfort of your home. Apply a sea salt spray lightly, tousle the hair and allow it to dry. Here's how: Using a Curling Iron This method works for short, straight hair as it tends to be a little daunting to create the beach wave style. As these compressions and rarefactions propagate from one point to another, they form a longitudinal wave, with the disturbance in the medium moving in the same direction as the wave itself. If you study the diagram of the wave above, you'll see that longitudinal waves have the same basic characteristics as transverse waves. They have wavelength (the distance between two compressions), amplitude (the amount the medium is compressed) and frequency (the number of compressions that pass a fixed point per second). Frequency refers to the number of crests or troughs that pass a fixed point per second. Hold it for 10-15 seconds and release it. Start by applying a sea salt spray to the roots of your hair. Then, take a section of hair and wrap it around the barrel of the curling iron. Hold it for 10-15 seconds and release it. Repeat the process for all the sections of your hair. Once you're done, apply a light mist of hairspray to hold the waves in place. Beach waves are a popular hairstyle that can be achieved with a variety of techniques. One common method is to use a curling iron to create waves that fall naturally. Another method is to use a flat iron to create waves that are more defined. Beach waves are a versatile hairstyle that can be worn in a variety of ways. They are a great choice for anyone looking for a low-maintenance, easy-to-style hairstyle.
